

Getting Published – in English!

‘Yes! Your manuscript has been accepted for publication...’

David Stuligross (Senior Language Consultant at Clarity Editorial Services)

January 16, 2019

18:30-20:00, Room 301, 3F, Building 10, Sophia University

How do you get a publisher to write these magic words? And what happens next? David Stuligross will trace the process of getting published in English-language journals and books, emphasizing moments where scholar-authors have the greatest ability to influence a publisher's decisions, as well as the moments where native Japanese writers might have the greatest difficulties – and how to overcome them. The talk is aimed at both young and more experienced scholars, all of whom are urged to consider the complexities of cross-cultural communication as they present themselves and their work to prospective publishers.

For fifteen years, David Stuligross has supervised the journey of manuscripts from submission through publication at both a journal (Asian Survey) and an academic book publisher (NIAS Press, Copenhagen). He is now Senior Language Consultant at Clarity Editorial Services, where he specializes in raising academic writing to the standard required for publication in English by world class presses and in world class journals. He has witnessed academic publishing from all angles. Prior to settling into a career as an academic editor, he earned a PhD (political science, Berkeley, 2001), published several articles in peer-reviewed journals, and mentored hundreds of students at the University of Michigan and elsewhere.

Lecture in English / No RSVP necessary / This talk is organized by Professor Tadashi Anno (FLA).
