Background of the Project

This project aims at strengthening a community of scholars studying the history of Sophia University and, in the long term, the completion of a History of Sophia University from its foundation until the twenty-first century. Beginning with a symposium organized on the occasion of the university's 100th anniversary (http://www.sophia.ac.jp/eng/info/events/2013/12/event_1176/event20131209), we have been building up a group of Sophia scholars, former Sophia faculty as well as external researchers interested in the history of our university.

The focus of the project is on the contexts and connections that have shaped Sophia's history and on developments that have given the university its character and direction. In doing so, we aim at underlining the dynamics of the university's history. Due to the limitations in terms of sources, authors, and finances, the coverage will be topical and selective. The project involves multiple authors, but aims for a greater integration than would be possible with a collection of individually authored essays.

The research project has to be seen in the wider context of research on Japan's modern education system and on the development of Japanese universities and their international connections in particular. Compared to the situation of other universities with roots going back to the prewar period, Sophia's history has received little academic attention. Of the four Christian-affiliated institutions recognized as full-fledged universities under the University Ordinance of 1918 (Dōshisha, Rikkyō, Sophia, and Kwansei Gakuin), Dōshisha and Rikkyō have published multiple works of research (in both book and specialized periodical form) on their histories. Kwansei Gakuin has put out a multivolume university history combining analytical narrative with primary sources. Some Protestant schools that did not become recognized as universities until after the war, such as Meiji Gakuin, have done the same. Sophia has so far published a six-volume collection of documents related to the history of the university (上智大学史資料集), which will be an essential resource for this project. However, apart from a valuable but brief account published privately in 1993 by Theodor Geppert (and not widely available) and recent studies in German by Klaus Schatz based on materials in European Jesuit archives, there is no reliable, document-based, analytical narrative of Sophia University's history. This project seeks to fill this gap by exploring in depth the issues and events that have shaped Sophia's history.

The volume will be published in English and Japanese. Sven Saaler, Kate Nakai and Nagai Nobuhito will be the editors of both volumes and have begun to coordinate the authoring of the chapters written by the collaborators and contributors.

Activities during FY 2021

The members and affiliate members individually have conducted research on the history of Sophia University.

The editors of the proposed book, Sven Saaler, Kate Nakai and Nagai Nobuhito, held editorial conferences online and discussed the progress that has been made and current problems, such as the inability to travel and the lack of access to archives.

The main result of this project during FY2021 was the completion of a booklet, published in the new Sophia Archives Booklet Series, on the first "evaluation" of Sophia University by visitor Cardinal Bea in 1929. The booklet is titled "The Jesuit Japan Mission and the 1929 Visitation by Augustin Bea SJ" and was originally written in German by Father Mohr. In a previous year, we translated the text into English, and, during FY2021, into Japanese. The (bilingual) booklet contains both the English and the Japanese version and was published online on the website of the Sophia University Archives.

In addition, we focused on digitalizing primary sources and making them easier accessible to the project participants. With the help of a graduate student from the History Department, we continued indexing and digitalizing the Katorikku Shinbun (Catholic Newspaper), which carries articles about Sophia's development from the 1930s into the postwar era. Eventually, the digitalized files will be made accessible on the repository of Sophia University Library as a remaining achievement of this research project.

Lastly, we arranged the translation of some primary sources from Latin into English. These sources, which have been provided to us by the archive of the Society of Jesus in Rome, will be essential for the further writing of the history of Sophia University.

Budget

We used the allocated budget for student support (compiling and digitalizing primary sources, in particular the Catholic Newspaper), for translating Father Mohr's article into Japanese, and for translating primary sources from Latin into English.
